As the nation gets ready for the start of a new school year, NOW profiles an extraordinary school that takes a radically different approach to education. The New York City public school Manhattan Comprehensive Night and Day High School is a place of last chances for kids who don't fit anywhere else: new immigrants who barely speak English, foster children who've bounced from home to home, students who've chronically failed and teenage mothers struggling to make a better life for themselves and their children. Today the school serves 800 students, open from 11:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m. from Monday to Friday and on Sunday. The student body comes from over 40 countries as well as the U.S., and ranges in age 17 to 22. The school and students' ultimate goal? A high school diploma.

What should investors be buying and selling right now to stay a step ahead of the charging Greenspan express? Some savvy investors are cheering the Fed's Wednesday interest rate hike--even calling for greater increases. Is that silver lining logic or just niche thinking? Anthony Crescenzi, chief bond-market strategist at Miller Tabak, and money manager and Wall $treet Week with FORTUNE contributor Michael Farr take a 360-degree look at the effects of the Fed's actions. Then, How can investors protect themselves from the likes of the nearly 500 brokers and two dozen firms barred from the securities business for shady practices in the past year alone? Even the best-informed investors can find themselves victimized by shady brokers, online stock scams, and myriad of other investment rip-offs that have proliferated over the years. Journalist Gary Weiss, author of Born to Steal: When the Mafia Hit Wall Street, warns that billions of dollars are being skimmed off the top by a host of nefarious schemes--right under the eyes of regulators. Melanie Senter Lubin, Maryland Securities Commissioner and a national investor fraud fighting figure, explains the do's and don'ts of assessing an investment.

The gloves are off and the fight for the White House is in full swing. The latest polling numbers from John Zogby, taken at the close of the Republican National Convention, show President Bush gaining momentum. In fact, Bush is enjoying a double-digit lead over Kerry among the self-identified investor class votes. John Zogby joins Karen Gibbs with the meat and potatoes of his latest poll. Then, well as John Zogby says, the voters consistently say that as far as they're concerned, it's not about Iraq, it's about jobs and the economy. But with the U.S. still a million jobs short of where it was when President Bush took office, did he offer a compelling defense of his record in his acceptance speech? On the other hand, with jobs increasing and unemployment now at its lowest level in three years, can John Kerry still play this issue to his advantage? Geoff Colvin talks with Mickey Kantor and Todd Bucholz to discuss these issues. Finally, Karen Gibbs is joined by Michael Farr for an investor perspective.

Massive budget deficits, continuing mayhem in Iraq, and a very close presidential race are just a few of the storm clouds billowing over our nation. What's the best way to prepare for the possibility of an economic tempest? Where are the shelters? What is the survival strategy? Two top investors with differing perspectives on the world offer emergency plans for investment success. We'll get the long and the short of it from famed Hedge Fund Manager Jim Chanos, who was among the first to discover the games Enron played, and John Rutledge, who predicts calm after the storm. Then, we're all living longer, spending more time in retirement, but the big question is: How will we pay for that longevity? Prevailing wisdom says stock up on bonds for the golden years, but does that adage have any teeth? Investor and author Phil Dow is skeptical. His unique investment strategy says buy the bulldogs--great companies, tenacious industry leaders that will deliver solid results for the long haul. These bulldogs just might guide you to that pot of gold.

In Mississippi, as many as 65,000 people are bracing for the deepest cuts any state has ever made in Medicaid eligibility for senior citizens and the disabled. The cuts are so severe, critics say, that many of the state's most vulnerable are facing an unthinkable choice between buying food and buying medicine. Bill Moyers goes inside the Mississippi Medicaid crisis and examines the cutbacks championed by the state's republican governor, Haley Barbour. Are tough cuts necessary, as Barbour argues, to save the program for the future, or are other viable options being overlooked?

In Sub-Saharan Africa today, AIDS is not only a vast humanitarian tragedy, but also a dire threat to regional stability. As death rates from AIDS exceed the rate at which teachers, doctors, and security forces can be trained and maintained, whole nations may begin to collapse. Perhaps the only benefit from Angola's long civil war is that the country now has one of the lowest HIV infection rates in Southern Africa. Strategically important because of its oil reserves, Angola is now coping with the problems of peace. As refugees and soldiers return home and transportation and trade resume, the spread of AIDS looms. In response to this new enemy the government has once again rallied its military forces. WIDE ANGLE explores the role of the military, the only functioning arm of the state, in its bold attempt to combat the AIDS pandemic. The challenges it faces offer an arresting portrait of a nation at a crucial moment in history.

This week's edition is devoted to America's intensifying preoccupation with its weight. Now governments are joining the diet industry and the media in telling the country that it's too fat. But where Atkins and South Beach can only help through education and motivation, government has new regulations, new labels, and new taxes at its disposal. And the Bush administration recently joined the fray by expanding Medicare to cover obesity itself, rather than just its consequences. First Up this week is Michael Jacobson, the executive director of The Center for Science in the Public Interest, who has argued for extensive restaurant menu labeling, taxes on soft drinks, and restrictions on some types of advertising. Then Tucker speaks with Paul Campos, a University of Colorado law professor and the author of The Obesity Myth: Why America's Obsession with Weight is Hazardous to Your Health. On the Back Page is Wendy Shanker. This New York comedian and the author of The Fat Girl's Guide to Life will discuss being fat and getting along despite the social stigma.

Twenty years ago, the government put in place a system which it considered fair, to distribute organs based on medical criteria, but people who are desperate have found ways to get around the rules. Then, the amazing success of a New York City pastor and also, now, an Ohio college president who may be the country's leading master at using his political connections to get government grants so his church can develop its neighborhood. A violation of the separation of church and state? Reverend Flake says that discussion has "no value." Finally, one of the most popular celebrations for Hindus around the world: Ganesha Chaturthi, the birthday last Sunday (September 19) of the elephant-headed god Lord Ganesha. Hindus honor thousands of deities, described as many manifestations of one god.

As Democrats and Republicans battle for the hearts and minds of voters in key swing states, author Thomas Frank turns his attention to the traditionally red-voting state of Kansas which, he says, is a microcosm of a sea change in the voting patterns of working class Americas. Blue collar workers, says Frank, are embracing a conservative moral agenda centering on opposition to abortion and gay marriage and support for school prayer. The American working class, he argues, is voting against its own economic interests. What can the Sunflower state tell us about why Americans struggling to provide for their families would vote conservative and against their own economic futures? Bill Moyers interviews Frank, who argues that a culture war has led to a political deck stacked against America's working poor, the topic of his new book WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH KANSAS?: HOW CONSERVATIVES WON THE HEART OF AMERICA.

With the Kerry-Edwards ticket confirmed, the airwaves are abuzz with a fresh crop of political ads highlighting the Democratic vision of America. And this week the news is all about politics. But what's behind the sound bites and images that we see on television? One of the country's most respected political analysts, Kathleen Hall Jamieson is dean of the Annenberg School for Communication and author of EVERYTHING YOU THINK YOU KNOW ABOUT POLITICS... AND WHY YOU'RE WRONG. Bill Moyers talks Jamieson to analyze the campaign ads and rhetoric that is defining the agenda of both tickets.

This Monday, when the lights go on in Boston at the Democratic convention, speakers will be center stage and working hard to deliver messages that connect with voters. Analysts say that for two decades conservatives have done a much better job than progressives to frame and talk about their values and some say the convention could be a make or break moment in the election. Do words really have the power to win not just hearts and minds, but votes? David Brancaccio gets a few words on the subject from world-renowned linguist George Lakoff.

Everybody's talking about the 9/11 Commission report and what it means for this country's security in the future. But for all the talk of a bi-partisan effort on getting to the bottom of what went wrong on 9/11, partisan and political struggles were rife throughout the process. Bill Moyers gets the insight of author and political analyst Kevin Phillips on the success or failure of the commission and the other news of the week, including what Kerry might say at the Democratic Convention and the realities of the so-called economic recovery.

If voters are relying on local television news to help them make decisions in this important election year, recent studies show that they may be left in the dark. By some estimates, more than half of local news broadcasts may not cover politics at all in the weeks before the election, and important local races and issues are often completely ignored. In a nation where the public owns the airwaves, are local stations driving corporate profits at the expense of the communities they are supposed to serve? David Brancaccio takes a hard look at how local broadcasters are covering politics.

criticisms of the Bush administration's policies - economic and otherwise. In this week's Plus 2 segment, Carlson is joined by Zanny Minton Beddoes of The Economist and Dan Flynn in a discussion of the state of the nation's economic fortunes and the latest developments in the presidential campaign. Author Franklin Foer has found a unique measure of globalization and its impacts: soccer. Carlson and the writer explore these views, expressed in the new work, How Soccer Explains the World, on the Back Page.

This week's edition is devoted to America's intensifying preoccupation with its weight. Now governments are joining the diet industry and the media in telling the country that it's too fat. But where Atkins and South Beach can only help through education and motivation, government has new regulations, new labels, and new taxes at its disposal. And the Bush administration recently joined the fray by expanding Medicare to cover obesity itself, rather than just its consequences. First Up this week is Michael Jacobson, the executive director of The Center for Science in the Public Interest, who has argued for extensive restaurant menu labeling, taxes on soft drinks, and restrictions on some types of advertising. Then Tucker speaks with Paul Campos, a University of Colorado law professor and the author of The Obesity Myth: Why America's Obsession with Weight is Hazardous to Your Health. On the Back Page is Wendy Shanker. This New York comedian and the author of The Fat Girl's Guide to Life will discuss being fat and getting along despite the social stigma.

Tucker interviews Sam Harris, author of The End of Faith: Religion, Terror, and the Future of Research, who argues that while the United States faces Islamic extremists specifically, all religions inevitably bring out the worst in their adherents. In the Plus 2 segment, Tucker is joined by Zanny Minton Beddoes of The Economist and Deroy Murdoch of Scripps Howard in a discussion of the latest political news, with a particular eye toward next week's Republican National Convention. And on the Back Page, Tucker engages Charles Noble, author of The Collapse of Liberalism: Why America Needs a New Left, who argues that Democrats continue to lose elections because they don't offer their voters more principled alternatives. Borrowing from Barry Goldwater and Ronald Reagan, Noble contends that a successful left has to first believe in its own ideas.

The debate over a 30-year-old war fires up the August campaign. But how does it affect voters? Are they more worried about how to wage wars abroad or how to hold on to jobs at home? Also, both major candidates tell veterans how they plan to defend the nation in the future. We look at the president's plan to redeploy tens of thousands of U.S. troops and at Kerry's response. Plus, the standoff in Iraq, as the new government there searches for a way to rout out a stubborn and lingering insurgency. Covering these stories this week, Jeanne Cummings of "The Wall Street Journal," Gebe Martinez of "The Houston

Chronicle," Doyle McManus of the "Los Angeles Times," and Barbara Slavin of "USA Today."

Update: Crisis in Sudan: Secretary of state Colin Powell used the term genocide for the first time today to describe the murder of tens of thousands of African Sudanese in the Darfur region of western Sudan. Correspondent Terence Smith looks at the evolving U.S. response to the humanitarian and refugee crisis in Sudan and Chad. On the Stump: President Bush promoted his economic agenda at a rally in Colmar, Pennsylvania, today. Democratic presidential nominee Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) spoke about healthcare reform at a rally in Des Moines, Iowa. Correspondent Kwame Holman reports. Ending the Ban?: The federal assault-weapons ban, which outlaws 19 types of semi-automatic weapons, is set to expire on Monday if Congress does not renew it. Senior correspondent Margaret Warner gets two perspectives on whether Congress should renew the ban from Sen. Diane Feinstein (D-Calif.), an original supporter of the 1994 assault-weapons ban, and Sen. Larry Craig (R-Idaho), a board member of the National Rifle Association. Disclosing Data: A group of prestigious medical journals announced yesterday that they will not report the results of any clinical trial that is not registered in a public database from its beginning. Health correspondent Susan Dentzer explains the growing controversy over the disclosure of clinical-trial results. Senior correspondent Ray Suarez gets two differing views in the debate over disclosure from Alan Goldhammer of the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturer's Association of America and Kay Dickersin, director of the U.S. Cochrane Center and a professor of community health at Brown Medical School.

The center of the storm is forecast to hit the island nation tonight or early tomorrow and then strike South Florida as early as Sunday. Senior correspondent Ray Suarez gets an update on Hurricane Ivan, its path and its expected impact from AccuWeather meteorologist Joe Bastardi and New York Times reporter Felicity Barringer in Miami. Campaign Snapshots: President Bush and Democratic presidential candidate, senator John Kerry (D-Mass.), both addressed healthcare reform at rallies in Huntington, West Virginia, and St. Louis, Missouri, today. Parsing Polls: The Newsweek and Time Magazine polls published this week show a double-digit lead for President Bush in the presidential race, while other recent polls have placed the president in a statistical tie with Sen. Kerry. Media correspondent Terence Smith explores how voters should interpret conflicting poll data with Time Magazine columnist Joe Klein and Andrew Kohut, director of the Pew Research Center for the People and the Press. Shields and Brooks: Jim Lehrer speaks with syndicated columnist Mark Shields and New York Times columnist David Brooks about the controversy over recently released documents detailing President Bush's National Guard service, the debate over the renewal of the assault-weapons ban and the third anniversary of the September 11 terrorist attacks. The Storyteller: Senegalese singer and songwriter Youssou N'Dour tries to create a more positive image of Islamic culture in Africa with his music. Arts correspondent Jeffrey Brown speaks with N'Dour about his music and his message.

In the wake of the 9/11 Commission Report, a critical question continues to haunt America's national psyche: how could the most powerful nation on earth have been so utterly unprepared to protect its homeland? In "9/11: For the Record," a special one-hour analysis of the commission report, NOW with Bill Moyers connects the dots of what happened that day and the warning signs leading up to it. On the eve of the third anniversary of 9/11, Bill Moyers once again teams up with a long-time colleague, the award-winning producer Sherry Jones, to take a second look at what the 9/11 Commission found. Jones, whose credits include "Watergate Plus 30: Shadow of History," "Trade Secrets," and "High Crimes and Misdemeanors," highlights the agonizing close calls, missteps, and outright failures of two successive administrations and America's intelligence and security agencies in the months and years leading up to 9/11.

Whatever happened to small government? The Republican presidential nominee, George W. Bush, has grown government spending dramatically in his first term. Newt Gingrich brought Republicans to power 10 years ago by promising a much smaller government in his "Contract with America." Ten years later, at the Republican National Convention, Gingrich was almost entirely out of sight. And that's exactly the reason Tucker begins his convention coverage with the former speaker of the house. The Republicans put on an impressive television spectacle in the heart of Manhattan. Carlson discusses the glitz and the production with Richard Cohen of The Washington Post and Deroy Murdoch of the Scripps Howard News Service, both long-time New Yorkers. The segment was taped, naturally, in the heart of Manhattan's theatre district, at Sardi's restaurant, just steps away from Times Square. One of America's foremost observers of the intersection of culture and politics is New York Times columnist Frank Rich. Carlson met with him to discuss this intersection and other topics.

The gloves are off and the fight for the White House is in full swing. The latest polling numbers from John Zogby, taken at the close of the Republican National Convention, show President Bush gaining momentum. In fact, Bush is enjoying a double-digit lead over Kerry among the self-identified investor class votes. John Zogby joins Karen Gibbs with the meat and potatoes of his latest poll. Then, well as John Zogby says, the voters consistently say that as far as they're concerned, it's not about Iraq, it's about jobs and the economy. But with the U.S. still a million jobs short of where it was when President Bush took office, did he offer a compelling defense of his record in his acceptance speech? On the other hand, with jobs increasing and unemployment now at its lowest level in three years, can John Kerry still play this issue to his advantage? Geoff Colvin talks with Mickey Kantor and Todd Bucholz to discuss these issues. Finally, Karen Gibbs is joined by Michael Farr for an investor perspective.

Presidential debates can change the course of elections, but George Farah, a remarkable young author and executive director of Open Debates, has evidence showing that the debates' rules of order have been hijacked by the two main political parties. The result? Moderators can't ask follow-up questions, important issues are never raised, and credible third-party candidates are excluded from the proceedings altogether. NOW with Bill Moyers details the secretive process by which the party handlers ensure there won't be a substantive discussion of the issues at what are, for many voters, the most important events of the campaign.

What you see of the political conventions on television is only part of the story. Behind the scenes and away from the rhetoric at the convention halls, lavish parties sponsored by corporate interests celebrate the union of money and politics. NOW with Bill Moyers and ABC News chief investigative correspondent Brian Ross examine the close ties between big corporate donors and the elected officials they're courting and provides a candid look at the parties that the Democrats and Republicans don't want you to see. Also on the program, 40 years after the Wilderness Act was signed into law, NOW's David Brancaccio takes a look at changes in public policy which could remove protection from millions of acres of unspoiled land.

Length: 30
Format: Interview/Discussion/Review

Karen Gibbs goes behind the scenes of the New York Stock Exchange and examines the potential root causes behind the now settled scandal of how elite Floor trading firms put their interests ahead of those of investors. Then, e-mails and other Enron insider documents obtained exclusively by FORTUNE's Bethany McLean and Peter Elkind for their book, The Smartest Guys in the Room, show unequivocally how Enron's deceit could never have succeeded without the enthusiastic participation of some of the biggest and best known firms on Wall Street. McLean discusses the scope of the fraud, and how investors can take steps to avoid the next inevitable scandal.

Today, all the easy oil has been found. So to meet the world's insatiable and growing thirst, the oil industry must cross new frontiers. The global oil business must deploy technological innovation, tackle environmental extremes, and face ethical and political risks. "Extreme Oil" goes beyond the familiar territory of the Gulf and the Middle East to some of the world's other rich oil regions -- to test these new frontiers. The series explores the global oil industry in the form of a journey, a voyage of discovery through the world's oil-production regions. On this journey we encounter the real people in the field. Caught up in the action, their words and stories reveal a high octane, billion dollar industry that continues to affect the lives of every man, woman and child on the planet.
